The world continues to embrace and praise new innovative and advanced technologies. On December 17, 1903 the Wright brothers turned the dream of flying into a reality. Television brought a new connection and love for radio stars. The iPhone has changed the way people communicate and stay connected. Who would have thought a grandma could call her grandkids across the country and actually be able to see them on her computer, tablet, or phone screen. Now the FDA has approved another life changing product. On April 17, 2015 the FDA approved the KAMRA inlay. The KAMRA inlay frees everyone from the constant frustrations of reading glasses.

In our 40s and 50s we all experience presbyopia, the loss of near vision, and have to turn to readers for help. No one likes relying on readers, they are never in the place you need them and they make you feel older than what you really are. It's time to throw away your reading glasses and get the KAMRA inlay.

The KAMRA inlay Treatment:

1. Restores everyday vision so you can see text messages a computer screen and the time on your watch, with out the constant frustrations of reading glasses or contact lenses.
2. Provides a natural range of vision - from near to far - without blurry zones.

The Recovery Process

It is important to remember the KAMRA inlay procedure is a surgery and just like any other surgery there is a continual healing process. For the first 48 hours it is common to have light sensitivity, watery eyes and irritation. Every patient varies in the healing process as well. In the first week of recovery some may notice a dramatic recovery while others may experience moderate to minimal improvement. It is important to remember your vision will continue to get better as weeks and months go on. 3 tips you can do to accelerate your recovery are:

1. Avoid Reading Glasses
2. Take medications as prescribed
3. Keep ALL follow-up appointments
